REPORT OF THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SCOTTISH HISTORY SOCIETY.

THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING was held in Dowell's Rooms, Edinburgh, on 9th December 1916,—Mr. James MacLehose, LL.D., presiding.

The SECRETARY read the Report of the Council as follows :—

During the past year nine members have died, five have resigned, and a few defaulters have been struck off the list, which now contains 365 names (exclusive of libraries), so that there are thirty-five vacancies.

Since last General Meeting two volumes have been issued, viz., Highland Papers, vol. ii., and Origins of the '45. The former volume is issued for 1914-1915, and the latter (in accordance with the resolution passed at last General Meeting) both for 1909-1910 and for 1914-1915. Both issues have given general satisfaction, and have aroused interest in many quarters beyond the membership.

The Society is now to be congratulated on having no issues in arrear except those for 1915-1916, viz., Selections from the Records of the Regality of Melrose, vol. iii., and the Catalogue of Topographical Works relating to Scotland. The former (which includes valuable matter from the Earl of Haddington's papers) is in type and will shortly be issued. The latter, which will be of service to many classes of inquirers, is all in type except the index; it is to be divided into two volumes, the first of which (dealing with Scotland by counties) will be assigned to 1915-1916, and the second (arranged by subjects) to the year beginning 13th November 1916.

For 1916-1917, then, it is proposed to issue (1) the second volume of the Topographical Catalogue aforesaid, and (2) either Wariston's Diary, vol. ii., or the first volume of Professor Terry's Papers relating to the Army of the Solemn League and Covenant, 1643-1647, which, like the Topographical Catalogue, is too large to be contained in one volume. All of these forthcoming issues are at press, and a considerable portion of each of them in type. There is every reason to hope that both the volumes for 1916-1917 will be in members' hands before the close of the current year.

Among publications to be undertaken later on, are a third selection of Papers relating to the Highlands, edited like its predecessors by Mr. Macphail, K.C.; a set of selections from the Baron Court Book of Forbes, and another from papers preserved at Colstoun. The two latter, along with some interesting correspondence relating to Galloway, will probably be included in the next volume of the Society's Miscellany.

For the projected extracts from Edinburgh Town Council records, mentioned in last year's Report, no editor has yet been found. The same difficulty has compelled the indefinite postponement of the Balcarres Papers; and there seems little hope of any improvement of the situation in this respect during the war.

The early records of the University of St. Andrews are perhaps the most important Scottish documents still unprinted. Arrangements for their publication by the Society were almost completed a year or two ago, but unfortunately the project was not realised, and this work remains undone.

The Members of Council retiring by rotation are Professor Hume Brown, Mr. W. K. Dickson and Mr. Macphail. It is recommended that all three be re-elected.

The accounts of the Hon. Treasurer, of which an abstract is appended, show that the balance in the Society's favour on 13th November 1915 was £372, 14s. 11d., the income for 1915-1916 £505, 8s. 11d., the expenditure £676, 13s. 11d., and the credit balance on 13th November 1916 £201, 9s. 11d.

Note.—The expenditure during this year includes outlays upon eight volumes, four of which have not yet been issued; and there has also been paid £60 to account of the General Index to the First Series, a volume of which the cost is intended to be defrayed by special subscription. The Society's financial position is therefore sound, in spite of the excess of expenditure over income during the past twelvemonth.

In moving the adoption of the report Mr. MacLehose said this was the first time for many years that the Society had been able to say that there were no arrears of long standing in the publication of their volumes. They had had issued this year two volumes. Mr. Blaikie's volume had been long expected, but he felt sure that the members were satisfied that it was well worth waiting for. The introduction to that volume, the editor's part of it, was one which added lustre to the Society's collection of volumes—an introduction in which Mr. Blaikie, with a reserve, with a sense of proportion, with a knowledge of history, and with a power of giving expression to his knowledge, gave them a record of events which led up to the '45 and presented it in a way which in several aspects was new and especially valuable. Besides the historical knowledge they had acquired from this volume, there were picturesque touches which added to the interest. They had the account of Glenbucket, that strange character from Aberdeenshire who did more than was generally supposed to make the '45, and who for a number of years, off and on, had a larger share in the real pulling of events than had been realised. In addition they had the great value of the documents Mr. Blaikie had secured from the French Archives. New light was gained by such papers as that sent by some Scottish Lairds to Rome and the documents in which the Marquis d'Eguilles reported in 1746 to the French King on his mission to Scotland. The latter document showed the Marquis's idea of the responsibility that Prince Charles had for fighting Culloden, instead of waiting for reinforcements.

Mr. Macphail's volume also struck him as one in which the editor's work added greatly to the value of the documents printed. It contained not only innumerable notes, but larger contributions, including one in which Mr. Macphail dealt with the various forms of military and land service in Scotland, going back even to a time when there was provision for galleys. The volume gave them touches of Highland life that were as picturesque as they were interesting; such stories as those of the Laird of Kintail and the Black Dog, of Lady MacLean rescuing her nephew from torture by burning, and the terror which an earthquake caused to a party of Highlanders returning from a murderous expedition, reminded one of the Highlander's closeness to nature and to animal life which strongly marks the tales collected by Mr. Gregorson Campbell of Tiree.

Controversial matters, such as, whether the Covenanters were or were not bloodthirsty or treacherous, appear in the Slaughter of Dunavertie, while ancient Church life in Old Aberdeen is recalled in the picture of the leaders of the General Assembly of 1640 riding from King's College to the Church of Old Machar to destroy the sculptured figures of Christ.

Mr. MacLehose went on to speak of the new programme of publications outlined in the report. A work which he said specially interested him was the list of books dealing with Scotland, prepared by Sir Arthur Mitchell. It might be worth the Society's while, he suggested, to consider the preparation of another volume, or couple of volumes, of early travels in Scotland. They knew from Sir Arthur Mitchell's report to the Society of Antiquaries in 1901 that there were various manuscript accounts of travels in Scotland which had not been printed; among these were manuscripts by Riddell of Friars Carse; by James Robertson in the Hebrides; by Dr. Clapperton in Galloway; by John Baine, the engineer; by Sir George Frederick, Surveyor-General of Ordnance, who particularly inquired into bridges and roads; and by the Rev. George Low, who travelled in the northern islands. It was curiously difficult to find out what Scotland was like two, three, or four hundred years ago. Lord Hervey, in his Memoirs of the Court of George II., reminds us that 'If there is anything in history which either delights or instructs, it is particular description.' They had any number of travels, but very few of the travellers had the right kind of eyes. Sometimes they chronicled unusual things, instead of the ordinary life which we wished to know of. They did not tell us enough about their agriculture, their houses, their meals—about the extent of their woods and the marshes. Other chroniclers wrote long papers and yet managed to write nothing of value. He remembered, on finding the manuscript diary of Ballantyne, Sir Walter Scott's friend, turning eagerly to see the year 1815 in order to find out what the country was thinking in those days. There was no reference to Waterloo; the writer was concerned in that year with the prospects of having a good fruit crop in his garden.

The Council might obtain an opinion as to whether the unprinted manuscripts to which he had referred were likely to add materially to their knowledge, and on this point Professor Hume Brown could give most valuable aid.

The Society might feel that its work was well in hand and that there was a large field of useful work before them. It was especially important that the Society should remain active, as it was probable that the work of the Government in publishing historical documents (which had been suspended owing to the war) would not be resumed for a considerable time.

But the progress of the work of the Society was dependent on the war. Many of those who did editorial work were beyond military age, but some of them nevertheless found that they could help to do the work of younger men. And only those who were in business could realise the difficulties of labour, owing to the absence of men and shortage of supplies; it might therefore be necessary to postpone the issue of some of their volumes.

Speaking to an historical society, he would only add that when the historian of the future came to tell of the war, in which men of to-day, in all parts of the British Empire, had volunteered to fight and to suffer for their country, he would have a story to tell of courage and of heroic devotion to duty which was unsurpassed in all our annals.

Mr. Spencer Thomson seconded, and the report was adopted.

On the motion of Sir James Balfour Paul, a vote of thanks was passed to Dr. MacLehose for presiding.
